

I strongly urge the Federal Communications Commission to reconsider its proposed rule making on mandatory recording of programming for all broadcast radio stations. The commission simply does not need to, and should not, require this of broadcasters. There are current "broadcast indecency" rules on the books right now that the Commission simply needs to enforce. The current outcry from the public is for the Commission to enforce its current rules and go after the major offenders. Not to put undue financial and physical burdens on every broadcaster in the country. The Commission does not need "station air checks" to find out who the offenders are. The public does a mighty fine job of keeping track of them and reporting them to the Commission. This type of government regulation on the broadcast industry is not needed and not wanted. Thank you!
